ARGUMENT IN CIA

NEIL BOGGS: "An argument in the super secret Central Intelligence Agency about some documents kept by one CIA man, an expert in clandestine operations. The agent, Hans Tofte, had listed his house for sale. Reportedly the CIA sent in another under the guise of being a prospective buyer. The agent browsed his way through Tofte's house and allegedly moved a number of classified papers and such laying right out in the open around the house.

"Later, CIA agents made another visit to the Tofte house and took the documents into custody. But now Tofte has made a counter charge. He says since the agents returned to the house, the documents aren't all that disappeared. Nineteen thousand dollars in jewelry is also missing, according to home owner Tofte. City and Federal authorities are investigating."
